Owing to an Act of the Legislature postponing the Collection of Taxes until the 1st of August, and the absence of many tax payers from home, there is a large deficit in the collections of the past two years, the most of which however will be collected before the end of the calendar year: Consequently the balance of $220.000. has been placed in the estimate of Receipts for the fiscal year 1864.

On the 4th of March 1863, the Legislature raised the price of land Scrip from fifty cents to two dollars per acre, and on that day, in anticipation of the Act, $21.400. were received from sales at the former price. Since that time, only one hundred and sixty acres have been sold at two dollars per acre. Had the price remained as it was, a very large amount of revenue would have accrued from that source.

According to an act of the last Legislature, all unsold Austin City Lots were advertised for sale, but in consequence of an Injunction granted by the Judge of this District, those reserve Lots adjacent to the Capitol Square were not offered for sale. All other Lots were sold for full value, yielding the aggregate Sum of $27.462.

In view of the enlarged financial operations of the Penitentiary some additional legislation concerning its organization may be deemed advisable, and if suitable provisions are made it will continue to be a very important source of revenue during the war and the suspension of Commerce.

An Act of January 13th 1862 required the Governor, Comptroller and Treasurer to substitute the Eighteen Cent Bonds of the "Million Loan" in the several Special Funds, for the amounts taken therefrom. This has not yet been done for the probable reason that the whole amount of these Bonds were required for more urgent purposes.

This is necessary to the prosperity of this country, and it is a great blessing to the State, and it is a great comfort of the people that the citizens who pay their taxes cheerfully

We have been obliged to avoid payments due at various times of the year, citizens with large taxes, and, if the Legislature fails to provide the necessary means for the collection of the revenue, the Government may suspend the collection of taxes for the present year. There ought to be a uniformity in the mode of collecting the taxes, and it should be certified. There ought to be a uniformity in the mode of collecting the taxes, and it should be certified. There ought to be a uniformity in the mode of collecting the taxes, and it should be certified.

Illinois Central

The Constitution of the State of Illinois provides that whenever the ordinary revenue and available State credit shall require the Legislature to impose a special tax sufficient to pay the interest annually, and to discharge the principal in eighteen years, every debt contracted for civil purposes, exceeding $100,000. The entire debt yet contracted may be considered as for military purposes and upon which the Constitution places no embarrassing restrictions whatever; yet, in the wisdom of the Legislature, the ordinary provisions of the Constitution, intended alone for the civil debt, are applied to the military debt, to the extent of the one million loan, authorized by act of April 16th 1861. Under these acts, the interest on the loans have been paid at New York promptly and without embarrassment to the Treasury, and the principal will be redeemed in twenty years from the passage of the acts, by the annual payment of three hundred thousand dollars.

What such provision has been made for the war debt of the State will be ascertained in the form of existing Warrants, the aggregate thereof to be funded in State bonds this present session of the Legislature adopted other measures, or made other means perfectly at their command the credit of the State might have been speedily sustained.

Notwithstanding the measures taken by the State as fully adequate to guard it against present embarrassment, yet Economy has also been an object to an unprecedented degree, in bringing the State to pay in proportion more than one million of dollars annually to the [illegible] Government

[illegible] the expenses of the State Government have been reduced to the lowest possible point consistent with the efficient administration of the affairs of the State, in relation of the public debt and the public works.

The report of the Auditor shows that the finances of the State Treasury have been in a prosperous condition, and that it was at that moment, that the operations of the Treasury, were most active. When shortly after the assembling of the Legislature the Governor of the State placed a printed statement of the finances of the State in the hands of each member of the Legislature, and called their particular attention to the fact that the State debt was increasing, and that the Treasury was empty, and that the Legislature must provide means to meet the expenses of the State Government, or change the system by which the State Treasury was managed. For the Legislature of the State to remain in session without providing means to pay the interest on the State debt, and to meet the expenses of the State Government, would be a disgrace to the State. It would be a public crime, for which the members of the Legislature would be responsible to their constituents. For them to refuse to provide means to pay the interest on the State debt, and the expenses of the State Government, would be a violation of their oaths of office, and a violation of the Constitution of the State. It would be a violation of the Constitution of the State, and would be a violation of the Constitution of the State, and would be a violation of the Constitution of the State, and the credit of the Richmond is directly responsible for the depreciation of their paper. It is vain to hope that a patriotic people will, in this hour of commercial distress make sacrifices to obtain the currency of the Government, nor are the people justly chargeable with the depreciation of the currency, with high prices. The first is the legitimate resort of the policy and contest of the Government and the second can will depend on supply and demand, together with the value of the currency received. So that is no event, can the people justly chargeable with either."

Arbitrary measures on the part of the Government or people, to sustain the currency, are not advisable, for the reason that they are never equal in their operations and must ever fail to accomplish the purpose, because of their injustice, together with the fact that values are not, and cannot be rendered subject to the arbitrary power of any community of people, without the concurrence of others engaged in commerce with them.

It is important to trace these evils to their true origin, in order to make a proper application of the remedy. The credit of the State, like that of an individual, must be sustained by economy and good faith in the fiscal concerns of the Government, without which the good will and sympathy of friends are not available.

The credit of the State depends in a great degree, as does that of the Confederate States, in the fact that the liabilities of that Government being the currency of the country, are necessarily made receivable for State dues. The Confederate States being without credit abroad or capital at home, were under the necessity of resorting, unlikely to the issue of promissory notes as a means of support, as this note is now seen to become the currency of the country, it is evident that adequate measures had been adopted to avoid the manifest evils of an excessive issue. The circulation was allowed to increase at an alarming rate, without any measures for its reduction; the supply of currency was unlimited, while the ordinary demands for money had ceased, in consequence of the blockade and the general suspension of the collection of debts. The legitimate and unavoidable result of such a policy is the present depreciation of currency, for which that Government is alone responsible.

It is not my province to consider the financial policy of the Confederate States. It may be well however, to enquire into the financial policy of those States in regard to their national debt. England and France may have incurred their debt under heavy national debts, because their debts were funded, and owed mostly by their own citizens. But should the funded debt of the States, which would, in effect, be the loan of commercial speculation, certainly fall into the hands of foreign capitalists, and there be required an annual export of specie sufficient, at least, to pay the interest, which is chiefly insufferable, for ordinary purposes; for though that amount might be raised for disbursement in the country, its annual export would soon impoverish the people, and subject the labor and property of the country entirely to the control and ownership of foreign capitalists.

These remarks are based upon the supposition that ultimately subject upon the Confederate debt will, at least equal the ordinary value of the the cotton crop of the country, allowing nothing in return, for the cost of production.

Should the Confederate Government continue to fund, and freely transfer its debts to foreign hands, at the present rate of discount, and by that means inflate upon the country a heavy foreign debt, for a trifling consideration, and deprive the people of all protection that would have resulted from the ownership of these liabilities at home, the result may be to subject the country to exorbitant demands from foreign bondholders, and all the calamities which follow such a state of embarrassment, or to the adoption of the only practical, but distasteful remedy of indefinitely heavy export duties on our great staple products, or by purchase and sale of them products by the Government, so as to realize a large portion of the profits that other countries have heretofore realized from those sources. The extent to which such a policy may be carried, can only be determined by its practical results; it is, therefore, more or less uncertain; and is also abandoning to the doctrine of free trade, which would appear to be the chosen policy of this country, with such exceptions as may become necessary to secure to it that national independence and subsistence during war, as the prosperous commerce with other nations.

In fixing on the debt of a Government remains on the form of currency in the hands of its own people, the mode of adjustment, with great facility, no matter how large the debt, is clearly indicated in the fact that the debt itself affords the means of its own liquidation. It is also worthy of note that when a public debt exceeds an amount that can be paid by the credit of the Government, its depreciation bears a direct proportion to that excess, so that an increase of Government liabilities beyond its just credit does not affect their aggregate value.
When the debt of the Confederacy was $100,000,000, its liabilities were at par value;
and on having (in gold) increased, by reason of its depreciation; it is only equivalent in value to the former amount, and may be discharged with equal facility, by the same amount of men &c.

These great advantages, then ever, will be lost to the Government, in the consummation of the present policy of consolidating the national debt, in that early that can only be done by fixing in market a long discount

The original sin of currency is depreciated, that of the Confederate. With it becomes a serious question. The Confederate Government practically indicated the policy of resorting to other means and relied in this unprecedented, and foreign extortions; and it is conceived, that by such means the public finances of depreciated notes may be avoided

This not, in any event, the question, nor is it in the power of the Government, to regulate and sustain the Confederate currency; nor has the people any control over it; except so far as they may direct the policy of the Government in this respect — it is, therefore, unnecessary, as it is that the Confederate should contain to sacrifice its interests, by its means for an unattainable purpose.

The present depreciation of State securities resulting not from an excess of State liabilities, or from increased reserves in the hands of the State but alone from a misguided policy of State legislation. An act of the Legislature making a proper application of the means of the State for the payment of its debt would relieve State liabilities to a value, but would withdraw the taxing power of the State and contribute more to the credit and resources of the Confederacy than can ever result from the present unequal policy of the State.

It may be well doubted whether specie can be long kept current as a standard of value in a paper currency, by a people so largely concerned in the commerce of the world, and whether these States should longer delay their return to a specie basis in all their financial measures.

The experience of the last clearly proves the power of promissory notes as a circulating medium, under circumstances making them equivalent to specie, by means of their ready convertibility, such as ready re-exchange attended with demand, by taxation, as may effectually place them at par with specie. If tax thus imposed constitute both the ability and disposition of the Government to pay, and there are the essential elements of a sound credit.
